In the sectors of the Stokhod river battlefield the struggle between the soldiers of the Czar and those of the two Kaisers continued without pause. Great masses of Russians are being hurled against Field Marshai von Linlines, and General Brussiloff

the Grand Duke Nicholas, are again on the move against the Turks. The Slav armies have had a thorough rest and a reorganization after the fierce winter and spring campaigns, and are said to be well supplied with artillery and ammunition, as well as yast num bers of men.

Reinforcements of all sorts have been seat from Russia to the Grand Duke. and us a result be has been able to strike again, at the Turkish positions in Appenies and to strike hard.

Naturally the fighting in the Somme river theater is what is attracting the greatest attention in France and Great Britain. There Gen. Sir Douglas Haig and Gen, Sir Frederick Wilson, who is in direct command of the British divisions fighting on the Somme, report that the British have succeeded in taking the second line of German trenches over a front of more than four miles, and in driving the Germans to their thirdse fortifications. Particularly intense was the strug-gle for Deville wood, which the Germans held at the commencement of the fighting yesterday, but which was held by the British when the night stopped the battle for the time being. Here the British spared neither men nor ammunition in the assaults they launched against the position.

The Germans clung desperately to their trembes here, but were finally driven out. Almost immediately they began counter-attacking in the hope of being able to regain the wood, which is of considerable local importance, but the British was office reports that all attacks were repulsed and cost the enemy very dear.
